

NEW-YORKISMS.

Portraits of Nilsson have begun to appear in music-store windows. Paragraphs about Nilsson light up the columns of the little advertisement-sheets that beguile audiences between the acts. Photographs of the prima donna and amiable gossip about la diosa are exchanged in editorial offices between agents and musical critics. The pipe is being laid, for it is settled that Christine is to be the reigning fashion and musical sensation in the United States for 1870-1.

She is now only twenty-seven years old, and stands in the very front rank of her profession, shining with a steady brilliancy beside which the fresh and wonderful glow of even Adella Patti threatens to pale. She sails from London in the Cunard steamer Cuba on the 9th of September, and will make her first appearance in America in Steiway Hall on or about the 19th of that month. What tenor will support her is as yet undecided. It is said that Brignoli will. The baritone is already engaged. His name is M. Napoleon Verger, and he will sail for London on the same day with the cantatrice.

Thurlow Weed is writing his autobiography, and publishing in The Galaxy such snatches of it as he can spare by the way. True, he has got only a little way yet, and has between forty and fifty years more to write up. In this, however, he will be materially assisted by his daughter, who has devoted some of the best portion of her life to keeping in order and ready for instant reference his extremely voluminous correspondence, which includes letters from very distinguished people in almost every part of the world.

The Knickerbocker and the Washington Company being rival companies in this city, and the commodity they deal in being ice, perhaps it is only natural that there should be a "coolness" between them. For some weeks past there has been, but yesterday their respective presidents met together, had a long and quiet talk, shook hands, snubbed a squad of reporters who were waiting outside, and agreed not to raise the price to two dollars a hundred. The coolness arose in this wise. The two companies possess between them seven depots, where they have been in the habit of storing ice together. Before being taken to the New York market this ice has to be divided, and each company accused the other of appropriating more than its share. The Knickerbocker shrugged its shoulders and went on shipping, and the Washington took out an injunction restraining it. Then the Washington gloriously had its own way for a day or two, when suddenly two car loads of ice, in process of transportation from Shaker Village to this city, were stopped by an injunction got out by the Knickerbocker Company. While the companies quarrelled the ice melted, and there was a prospect that unless they speedily came to terms new companies would absorb the business and furnish parched citizens with ice at a lower rate. Mutual cupidity made friends of them, and New York is now enjoying ice at $1.50 per hundred.

"Dig 'em up! Dig 'em up!" An obscure sentiment of philosophy diffused even through the lower orders must be the reason for the metaphysical and contemplative spirit with which skulls and skeletons and the whitened bones of random dead bodies are regarded when they are unexpectedly come across. It was all very well for Hamlet to poetize over Yorick's skull, because he knew it was Yorick's; but why should I mount into a rhapsody over a stray death's-head or crossbones that I accidentally dig up—say in my garden? Why should I detect myself prone to attach mystery and romance to lonely graves and crumbling masonry? Neglected spots do not always tempt with hearts once pregnant with celestial fire, and instead of adoring the spectrums of superstitious Hampdens and Miltons, it would be much more proper to say— "Some wandering peddler that used to cry 'Old clo', And got the better of you, if he could, Some poor old butter here turns up his toes, Who left his counter for his country's good."

That would be a little nearer the truth, I think. This speculation, however, may be thought to have little real connection with the fact that every reporter in the city has been more or less excited over the remains of fifteen bodies, found by some workmen who were digging near the southeast corner of the New Court House. Perhaps the Coroner was more excited than any one else, for his fees, amounting to $30 for each body, he realized nearly $500 as his share of the digging up. Some say the bones are the relics of those who collapsed from cholera in 1832, some say that they belonged to the prisoners who died in the old jail that before the Revolution covered the spot now occupied by the Department of Finance, some that they were the personal property of negroes executed for various crimes in 1741, and the majority agree in the pleasing conviction that the mysterious and the murderous are blended therein in equal proportions. I leave you to take your pick.
